Oxburgh Hall - keystoneok.info

Oxburgh Hall was one of the last fortified houses that would have afforded the residents any real measure of defence against attack, but for the most part, it was built for show. Though most of the east, west, and north wings are original 15th-century work, the south wing was rebuilt in 1865 with the help of architect AW Pugin, who is best remembered for his work on the Palace of Westminster.
