After the Incal Vol. 1: The New Dream by Alejandro Jodorowsky

This is the fourth of six volumes recounting the Incal series in a deluxe, oversized limited edition. Written by Alexandro Jodorowsky and drawn by Moebius, this sci-fi epic remains to this day one of the pinnacles of the ninth art (as the French refer to comics) or any storytelling art for that matter.

The Incal is a curious creation, born of the meandering spiritual obsessions of Jodorowsky and the wonderfully vivid drawings of Moebius. While the story lacks much coherent structure or purpose after a casual read, as with anything that Jodorowsky is involved with, there are tidbits of meaning and mystery sprinkled throughout, even if the sum total of those bits seems rather light in the ...

The story from the unfinished After the Incal was rewritten to provide a separate narrative for this volume. The story starts after The Incal climax, in which John DiFool encountered a flowing-bearded divine being named Orh, witnessing a universe-shaking event, hurtling towards certain death in the acid lake.

The Incal - Wikipedia

The third volume of The Incal ends the series in fine style, with a more cohesive story than the preceding installments and some truly spectacular art by Moebius. Even the colors are richer and more appropriate this time around, which allows Moebius' bold graphic vision to really shine.

The Incal: Alejandro Jodorowsky, Jean Giraud ...

5 stars for the art, 1.5 stars for the story The art is excellent. After a decent first volume, the story here significantly weakened. While there is some interesting social commentary set in this future-world that is dominated by technology and a dumbed down culture, the plot is out there and the dialogue is laughable at times.

Review: The Incal vol. 1: The Black Incal. January 19, 2018. By Dustin Cabeal. The Incal marks the first time I've read anything by Alexandro Jodorowsky or Moebius. I've probably broken some comic taboo that I care nothing about. A little backstory for me, if you tell me there is a creator I must read, that I need to read, I won't ...
