But there is warmth in ice. A flame that became an inferno. Because Maggie is my fire. The passionate heat that consumes everything in its path, incinerating me in a perfect, unyielding death. And during the heat of a Florida Christmas, I was reminded of why I needed fire to survive. To exist. To breathe. This is that story. The one that matters.

Living in college dorms rooms that are surrounded by brick walls and waiting for the heat to be turned on certainly doesn't help. It's a good thing that there are many other ways to find warmth on campus (and I'm not just talking about the heated blanket that my roommate so graciously let me borrow).
